Business & Industry — Associate Member

Associate members are a subset of the Council's Business and Industry* membership category. An organization is considered an Associate member if it functions as a vendor or service provider to other membership categories of the Council. Examples include law firms, public relations firms and consulting companies. Associate members are afforded all the privileges of other Council membership categories with the exception of serving on the Board of Directors or Nominating Committee and voting at annual meetings or other special membership meetings.

Business and Industry members include for-profit companies and some nonprofit organizations. Nonprofit organizations are considered nonprofit members of the Business and Industry category if the most recent three-year average of their revenue and expenses for the direct sale of health-related products and/or services is greater than 50% of total revenue and total expenses respectively.*
